

NORTHERN IRELAND WOMEN'S BUDGET GROUP (NIWBG) RESPONSE TO THE DRAFT BUDGET 2025-26 EQIA CONSULTATION

Department for Infrastructure (DfI)

Prepared by Alexandra Brennan (Coordinator) of NIWBG

June 2025

The Northern Ireland Women's Budget Group (NIWBG) is made up of organisations and individuals from the women's sector, trade union movement, academia and wider civil society in Northern Ireland, with the aim of implementing a gender equal economy. The members of the NIWBG scrutinise policy and budgetary matters with a gendered lens to bring attention to the different ways in which women and men are affected by government-level decision-making. It aims to provide policy- and budget-makers with policy analysis to secure substantive equality for women and men through the assessment of gender impact.

The NIWBG works with a range of organisations in Northern Ireland on devolved issues and with sister organisations in Wales, Scotland, England and Ireland on East-West and North-South issues.

We hope that our response will be considered by the Department when finalising the Draft Budget 2025-26 EQIA.

If there are any questions or comments regarding the NIWBG's response, please direct them to the Coordinator for the NIWBG, Alexandra Brennan (info@niwbg.org).

General Comments

We welcome the opportunity to respond to this consultation as the spending decisions taken by this Department are key to tackling gendered infrastructure inequalities. It is positive to see the diverse data sources used by the Department to help inform this assessment and potential decisions taken. While it is positive that the funding envelope received by the Department will help better resource key services than in previous years, the Department has acknowledged that it will not be able to '[deliver] the whole total level identified,' as many other Executive Departments have also stated. This assessment is an opportunity to demonstrate the thought-process behind departmental decision-making and plan for how the Department addresses impacts on protected equality characteristics. We feel that this could have been fleshed out more by the Department. In this response, we highlight some improvements the Department can make to the current EQIA and can embed in practice for future EQIAs.

One of the main issues with the EQIA is the lack of analysis for each equality group. As mentioned previously, the Department made a clear effort to expand the amount of data that is used to inform the assessment of potential equality impacts. However, when the data is applied to the specific protected characteristics, there is a bit of analysis provided but the connections made between this analysis and the potential decisions taken by the department are minimal. The Department should be plainly connecting spend and other potential decisions to the data that is collected and compiled underneath the Section 75 categories. It is important to note that this is also an opportunity for the Department to highlight positive impacts.

The EQIA also lacked thorough intersectional analysis. By including an intersectional lens to EQIAs, additional impacts come to light that could help inform decision-making and protect the most vulnerable from the worst impacts. By isolating protected characteristics into columns, each group becomes a silo. This does not take into account the make-up of most people as many identities are an amalgamation of protected characteristics. Therefore, introducing a more prominent intersectional lens to the equality analysis process would only strengthen the impact of the Department's allocated spend.

Mitigating Impact

In the consultation, the Department identifies a number of significant potential impacts on Section 75 groups, as well as society as a whole.

We direct the Department to guidance from the Equality Commission¹ on “Consideration of measures which might mitigate any adverse impact; and alternative policies which might better achieve the promotion of equality of opportunity”:

The consideration of mitigating measures and alternative policies is at the heart of the EQIA process. Different options must be developed which reflect different ways of delivering the policy aims. The consideration of mitigation of adverse impacts is intertwined with the consideration of alternative policies. Mitigation can take the form of lessening the severity of the adverse impact. Annex 1, para. 4.1.

Ways of delivering policy aims which have a less adverse effect on the relevant equality category, or which better promote equality of opportunity for the relevant equality category, must in particular be considered. Consideration must be given to whether separate implementation strategies are necessary for the policy to be effective for the relevant group. The following must be considered:

- How does each option further or hinder equality of opportunity?
- How does each option reinforce or challenge stereotypes which constitute or influence equality of opportunity?
- What are the consequences for the group concerned and for the public authority of not adopting an option more favourable to equality of opportunity?
- How will the relevant representative groups be advised of the new or changed policy or service?
- If an economic appraisal is necessary - What are the costs of implementing each option? Will the social and economic benefits to the relevant group of implementing the option outweigh the costs to the public authority or other groups?
- Does the public authority have international obligations which would be breached by, or could be furthered by, each of the options? Annex 1, para. 4.2

Clear evidence of the consideration of the impacts of alternatives must be apparent in the relevant consultation documentation. Annex 1, para. 4.3

We encourage the Department to incorporate this guidance within their analysis and development processes of the EQIA. Considering the scope and potential impacts of the Budget, analysis and mitigation of impact must be thorough and clear.

Gender Budgeting

Gender budgeting requires government departments to analyse the different impact of the budget on people of different genders, starting as early in the budget cycle as possible. The aim of gender budgeting is to ensure that the distribution of resources creates more gender equal outcomes. Over time, gender analysis should become embedded at all stages of the budget process. Women's intersecting identities are also included in this analysis and policy-makers are expected to promote these areas of equality as well. There is widespread political support for gender budgeting in Northern Ireland and a growing evidence base that it can help create a more equal society. In the current budget crisis women will experience particular disadvantages due to the pre-existing socio-economic conditions. For example, there is strong evidence that women have suffered disproportionately from over a decade of Westminster austerity measures, the pandemic, and the cost-of-living crisis². We cannot afford to continue making decisions at the expense of women and risk further degradations to gender equality and additional intersecting equalities as well.

Gender budgeting is good budgeting; it encourages greater transparency of government processes, more in-depth assessments of how policies and budgets affect constituents and closer cooperation between governmental and non-governmental stakeholders. It encourages a more targeted approach to the spending of public money, which will improve policy outcomes. Implementing gender budgeting mechanisms would provide decision-makers with the tools to recognise and mitigate gendered economic impacts and promote gender equality. Whilst political crises that affect budget processes are outside the control of departmental officials, strategically embedding gender budgeting measures will create a firewall to prevent such disproportionate disadvantages in future.

We recognise that the current equality screening and impact assessment duties under Section 75 provide policy infrastructure that could be used to progress gender budgeting. The EQIA process allows space to identify budget impacts on women and opportunities to promote more gender equal outcomes. However, too often the analysis included in these documents focuses only on equal treatment or stops at the point of acknowledging pre-existing inequalities. For gender budgeting to be fully implemented, the next stage must be to reformulate budgets and budgetary policy with targeted measures to improve outcomes for women and girls. Additionally, Section 75 screening and impact assessment typically takes places at the very end of the budget planning process or after the budget has been finalised. The OECD³ highlights that best practice for gender budgeting is to embed it at all levels of policy- and budget-making: planning, formulation, approval, implementation, monitoring and reformulation. It is crucial that gender equality obligations are not a ‘tick-box exercise,’ but rather that gender equality is mainstreamed in every area of the budgetary process through gender analysis of data supported by experts from civil society.

A gender budget statement is just one of a suite of tools that can be employed with the implementation of gender budgeting. Published alongside the annual budget, the statement is an opportunity for the Department to highlight where resources were allocated to promote gender and wider equality, as well as note equality gaps and address impacts. Using gender as the foundation for this equality analysis is key, as it helps to facilitate an intersectional approach to analysis as opposed to viewing each equality ground in a silo. In Victoria, a state in southeastern Australia, an annual Gender Equality Budget Statement is published alongside the budget. They provide an overall snapshot of how they allocated spend to promote gender equality, and then breakdown the spend – giving the context of the issue, what they are spending, and why they are spending the funds in that way. In the 2024-25 Statement⁴, the following was highlighted:

- More than 130 Budget initiatives were assessed as having a positive impact on gender equality. Nine initiatives were identified as having a significantly positive impact, with a total investment of $352 million.
- $657 million for services including addressing the ‘pain gap’ in women’s health.
- $1.8 billion to increase women’s economic security by supporting workers in women-dominated sectors and helping women to reskill and retrain.
- $292 million to assist with cost of living pressures that disproportionately affect women.
- $216 million to support Victorians experiencing homelessness into housing, including women.
- $269 million to prevent family violence and support women’s safety.

Acknowledging the issues at hand and demonstrating how resources will be used to mitigate/eradicate inequalities is not only useful for the Department, it also brings greater transparency to the budgeting process, with clearer links to where public money goes and the positive impact it can have on society.

Conclusion

We encourage the Department to take on the recommendations of this response. It is crucial that the Department allocates spend with the protection of equality characteristics in mind, and the EQIA is the best tool we have to help determine how best to achieve that. Again, we hope our response is considered by the Department and we would welcome the opportunity to meet with the Department to further discuss our response.
